THE CONSTITUTIONAL DUTY OF RESISTANCE AND JUSTICE

THE PATRIOT'S CONSTITUTIONAL DUTY

Holding the government strictly to the Constitution is not an anti-establishment stance; rather, it is a pro-establishment commitment to the rule of law. It is the fundamental responsibility of the people to hold government officials accountable to their oaths of office. Those who neglect this duty or ignore the errors of government show a lack of concern for their country. If citizens would not permit the burning of the American flag or the desecration of veterans' graves, they should similarly refuse to honor officials who disrespect their positions and the Constitution that veterans died to establish. True honor in government involves respecting the sacrifices made to give us this republic.

Every righteous individual in government should support the foundational principles of this nation. Currently, those foundations are under daily assault through policies that attempt to supersede the law. Law should dictate policy, but in recent years, this order has been reversed. When a society ignores divine commandments, it becomes burdened by thousands of man-made regulations. Current examples of this decline include open borders, high abortion rates, and attacks on the institution of the family, such as the withdrawal of the Justice Department from the Defense of Marriage Act and the overturning of military policies like "Don't Ask, Don't Tell". Furthermore, the removal of religious references from the public square and the declaration that America is no longer a Christian nation represent an extreme departure from our founding identity.

JUSTICE, MERCY, AND THE RULE OF LAW

Constituents are often labeled with derogatory terms such as radicals or extremists for simply demanding that the Constitution be upheld. However, the true definition of a patriot is one who stands against tyranny and upholds the laws of a constitutional republic. As Thomas Jefferson stated, resistance to tyrants is obedience to God. While we seek peace, we must also return to the path laid out by our forefathers, who prioritized obeying divine law over unjust human decrees.

The concept of mercy is often misunderstood in modern society. A parable of a ship's captain illustrates this: a captain who repeatedly shows mercy to an attacking enemy ship eventually brings destruction upon his own crew. Tolerating the crimes of the guilty is not true mercy; as Adam Smith noted, mercy to the guilty is cruelty to the innocent. When kindness overlooks judgment, justice is killed, and the liberties that justice is meant to guard are lost. Justice is the reason the republic was intended to be a light to the world, predicated on the refusal to tolerate transgressions against the law.

The modern incarceration system is a man-made institution that often makes the commandments of God void by following the commandments of men. This system is predicated on a form of slavery that promotes crime rather than deterring it, resulting in the highest incarceration rates in the world while generating billions in profit at the taxpayers' expense. True wisdom and understanding come from keeping the statutes that require justice and judgment upon those guilty of crimes.

ALLEGATIONS OF CORRUPTION AND TREASON

Evidence of societal decay is visible across the country, from Minnesota to New York and California. When the people fail to pay attention to these warnings, they risk being given over to the consequences of their disobedience. A reformation is needed to return to the identity established by our forefathers. Patrick Henry advised citizens to guard public liberty with jealous attention and to suspect anyone who approaches the power of office. Apathy and tolerance are the surest signs of a decaying society.

In Minnesota, specifically, there are grave concerns regarding the actions of officials like Tim Walz, Keith Ellison, and Ilhan Omar. Allegations have surfaced regarding the misuse of billions of dollars in taxpayer funds, which some characterize as aiding and abetting the enemies of the American people—an act defined as treason. Despite an $18 billion surplus in Minnesota recently, those funds have reportedly disappeared amidst massive fraud. There are reports of childcare centers being used as fronts for fraud, where millions of dollars are funneled through facilities that have no children present. This level of corruption is often ignored or covered by mainstream media, which uses smoke and mirrors to distract the public.

THE HISTORICAL PRECEDENT FOR RESISTANCE

The history of the American Revolution provides a model for modern resistance. In 1776, even when the outlook for independence was dark, leaders like William Williams understood that failing to stand against tyranny would result in the gallows. Today's citizens must decide if they will remain silent in the face of similar abuses. The current political environment often treats the righteous as guilty while the corrupt are allowed to set the narrative.

There is also a historical connection between radical ideologies and totalitarian regimes. For instance, during World War II, the Muslim Brotherhood collaborated with the Nazi regime to oppose their political enemies. This alliance serves as a warning about how certain groups can be used as political battering rams to sweep away opposition and establish a new world order. It is a historical fact that while many Americans fought against Hitler, elements of the financial and political elite were involved in supporting the very regimes our veterans died to defeat.

A CALL TO ACCOUNTABILITY AND ACTION

The time for silence has passed; Christian patriots and conservatives must communicate and come together to deal with corruption. We must not take counsel from our fears or live in a way where the enemies of righteousness do not respect our resolve. We have a prime opportunity to ensure that those who have committed fraud and treason are prosecuted according to the law.

The tree of liberty must be refreshed with the actions of those willing to stand for truth. If we continue to tolerate the weaponization of government against the people, we invite further tyranny. Independent journalists are currently risking their lives to expose these crimes, and it is the duty of the people to support these efforts and demand justice. We must return to the biblical principles that serve as the rock upon which our republic rests. Resistance to tyranny is not just a political right; it is a Christian and social duty.
